AGGRESSIVE DEMOCRACY.

ABOUT THE MOST encouraging sign in public affairs for a long while is the aggressive activity of the Democrats in congress and the sensible management of their campaign. For a while it looked as though the minority had gone to pieces hopelessly and the Republicans were going to have things all their own way. Now, thanks to the shrewdness of John Sharp Williams of Mississippi, the brilliant leader of the house Democracy, scarcely a day passes without some move that embarrases the Republicans and inspires Democrats all over the country with hope of victory during the coming campaign.

No party administration was ever more vulnerable than the present galaxy of stars headed by Roosevelt. Exposed corruption shows a condition of maladministration in public office more scandalous if possible than the disgrace which overshadowed the Republicans in the day of the Credit Mobilier, the whiskey frauds and the war department scandals under Belknap. Emboldened by the overwhelming success of the two McKinley campaigns, the Republicans had grown so bold in their programme of loot that they made it a wholesale business, apparently believing they could never be discovered, or if discovered, would escape punishment.

The scandalous corruption of Republican officials is enough of itself to make a change of administration desirable and imperative. But in addition to this, the Democracy has a great opportunity in the president's own personality. Spectacular, impulsive, unselfish, he has repelled the strongest element in his own party by his chief policies. Entering office with a reputation for antagonism to the trusts, he has said a good deal about the evils of monopoly and the necessity for curbing illegal combinations and monopolies. Instituting proceedings which won a partial victory in the Northern Securities case, his attorney general, presumably with the approval of the president, immediately hastened to assure the trusts that there was nothing serious in the situation; that the administration did not intend to upset their plans and that everything between them would be just as pleasant as if there had been no Northern Securities case.

Committed to imperialism in the worse sense of the word; committed to a "strong" policy which finds its vent in exploitation of his own peculiar views; antagonizing capital by his interference in the Pennsylvania strikes, and labor by his attitude in the government printing office affairs, he has managed to secure a variety and virulence of opposition within and without his party, which affords his political opponents every opportunity imaginable for successful campaigning.

Even if the president's policy and the corruption of his party officials did not offer reasons for a change, the continuation of the Dingley tariff schedules, designed solely for the benefit of the trusts, would furnish ample reason for a battle royal. While the country at large may not wish an absolute tariff for revenue only, there can be no question but that honest reform of the tariff is demanded by everybody except the chief beneficiaries.

Evidently the leaders of the Democracy in congress have struck the right plan of campaign, and from now on they will have the administration and its supporters on the defensive.

SOME NOTABLE IMPROVEMENTS

THE BREAKING OF GROUND for the new Oregon Short Line shops and other improvements to be installed by that road is an event of more than ordinary importance. Something like $1,000,000 will be expended by the Short Line locally. As rapidly as possible the new shops that will employ a large number of men permanently will be completed. Then the road will turn its attention to the erection of a new depot, an improvement long needed here.

The large expenditure entailed by this work in a year in which we are told the wave of prosperity is sure to subside, speaks volumes for the faith of the Short Line in the future of Salt Lake City. The company does not pose as a charitable institution. It is in the railroad business for the purpose of making money. In the past it has made money, and it expects to continue to do so. Nobody will quarrel with the Short Line on this account, for it deserves to succeed.

The road has been a contributing factor of no uncertain extent in the upbuilding of Salt Lake. During the years it has maintained general offices here it has distributed large sums of money among Salt Lake merchants and business men. Now the general offices are to be larger than ever, the shop pay rolls will be heavier, much of the money to be expended on the new improvements will go to Salt Lake working men, and if the city is not prosperous this year the fault will not be the Short Line's. It is setting an example of courage in the face of direful predictions, an example that we heartily commend to other corporations and investors.

NEW PENSION RULING.

SOMEBODY, DISCUSSING the candidacy of William Randolph Hearst for the presidency of the United States, and his liberal campaign allowances, said that Mr. Hearst was at least spending his own money in the furtherance of his ambition, and that he differed in this respect from President Roosevelt. The president is no less anxious to receive the Republican nomination than is Mr. Hearst to be honored by the Democrats. But Mr. Roosevelt is using the immense leverage his office gives him, and using it to no president before him has ever used it.

The latest example is his order to the pension department under which every honorably discharged veteran of the civil war who is more than 62 years of age is given a pension of $5 a month. The requirement of the law that to receive a pension a veteran must be at least partially disabled is evaded by the statement that it must be taken for granted that a man who is more than 62 years of age is de facto partially disabled. The ruling will increase the outlay for pensions by $5,400,000 annually, at a modest estimate.

Now, is every man who is over 62 years of age partially disabled? Run over the list of your acquaintances and you will find many men more than 62 years of age who are strong and sturdy and vigorous, fully capable of earning an honest living for themselves and their families. Many of them would resent an insinuation to the contrary. At least half the members of the United States senate are more than 62 years of age. Are they incapable of earning a living?

Not long ago President Roosevelt appointed to a lucrative position a man who for years has been drawing a pension for total disability. This same man has held one office or another most of the time since the close of the war. There has hardly been a time, in fact, when he was not drawing as much as $5,000 a year from the government in addition to his pension. The new ruling will let in more like him, more grabbers who have no shadow of right, morally speaking, to pensions.

The whole business looks very much like a plan to capture what is known as "the soldier vote." It is to be hoped the soldiers themselves will resent it and will show their resentment by voting against the man who would practically bribe them.

SHOULD HAVE BEEN HEARD.

REPRESENTATIVE BAKER of New York was really entitled to a hearing on his amendment to the post-office appropriation bill, this amendment providing for an appropriation of $50,000 to be paid to the railroad companies over whose lines President Roosevelt traveled during his country-wide junketing trip last year. There was no debate on the amendment. It was ruled out of order, and Mr. Baker was not given a chance to be heard in favor of it. He might have had some interesting things to say.

We hardly think $50,000 would cover the expense of that trip. President Roosevelt traveled thousands of miles in a magnificent special train. He had an abundance of wine and cigars, the best food the railroads could purchase and servants to anticipate his every wish. Those things cost money. We doubt if the presidential junket could be duplicated by an ordinary citizen for $100,000. However, the railroads are not asking anybody to pay the bills. They paid them cheerfully and without any hope of a rebate of any sort, financially speaking.

It would be too much to say, though, that the railroads do not expect an equivalent in presidential good will. Of course the president wasn't bribed by that trip. Nobody makes any such ridiculous charge as that. But most of us will agree with Miss Ida Tarbell when she says that the recipient of a gift becomes sooner or later, the apologist of the donor. And President Roosevelt is so careful about accepting gifts that he has refused to accept one now and then. He even declined to accept an American flag that was made specially for him by an American girl.

In all his career, however, he has not declined any present that possessed much intrinsic value. If he has the fact has not been recorded, and his string of presents runs from special trains to blooded horses and fancy saddles. The trouble about the Strenuous One is his inconsistency. He is far better able to pay railroad fare than a vast majority of his fellow citizens, and he is far better able to pay for everything else he needs or wants than most of us. Why, then, shouldn't he pay?

A debate on the Baker amendment would perhaps have brought out some reasons for the president's attitude.

We hardly credit the report that Senators Kearns and Smoot have sent word to all their friends to stay away from the Republican primaries tonight. Still, it may be true. If it is, and if the advice is taken, the primaries won't be worth seeing.

Just by way of showing that all is harmony in their party, the Republicans have scheduled a number of sharp fights for their state convention primaries tonight. If you don't want to get your head batted stay away.

THE MAN ABOUT CRAZY.

Dr. B. A. Kedair, the noted scientist of Kooheh, is in the city and has recently undertaken some interesting experiments with the water of Great Salt Lake. In a talk with me the other day, or perhaps, it was the day before that, the distinguished Utah savant shook loose some important information, the result of his exhaustive researches amid the waters of the lake.

"That fine milling radium in quantities so stupendous as to stagger belief exists in the waters of the Great Salt Lake, I have abundantly demonstrated," said the doctor to me. "I have long suspected there was something besides hydrogen and oxygen in that water. Lately I applied the radium test and was rewarded by discovering that the wonderful substance is there, and there strong. Many people have been puzzled to account for the wild exhilaration and mysterious thirst which follow a bath in the lake, but my latest discovery makes it all plain. It is radium that imparts the exhilaration. It is the radium that imparts the thirst. A few drops of liquidized radium will produce more thirst in ten minutes than would a thirty-day trip across the desert."

"But, to resume. So strong is the radio-activity of the water that the translucent shrimp of the lake, when taken into a dark room, emits rays not unlike the sparks of electricity. That this peculiarity of the salt lake shrimp was not discovered before is due merely to the fact that nobody ever took one into a dark room until I performed that feat."

"These rays set me to thinking, and I called in my assistant to ask if he could see the rays. He could. Then I knew they were really there. What produces these rays was the question. It is not fire, for the shrimp was quite cold. It was not electricity, because we could see the light. It was not coal oil gas, or we would have smelled it. Having established that it was no form of light of which we knew anything it naturally followed that it was radium, and the greatest discovery of recent times was an actuality."

"The best way to extract the radium from the water is by means of the shrimp. We have proved that by actual tests. We now get all the radium we need for laboratory purposes out of one shrimp each day. We place the shrimp in a small and simple apparatus and in a few minutes the radium is out of him with an ordinary pump. The same shrimp can be used several times. It only takes him a couple of hours to get the radium out of him from the lake water. We always keep an extra shrimp on hand in case the regular shrimp should meet with some mishap."

"I do not see how the importance of this discovery by Dr. Kedair can be overestimated. The doctor tells me that the possibilities of it are great, and I readily agree with him. Already the doctor is experimenting with shrimps for radium, to cause frogs' legs to grow on the shrimp, thus combining two table delicacies in one. This one application alone, if the doctor is correct, will make him so rich that he can continue his studies of radium here in town without returning to the farm for supplies each week."

I have received from a man signing himself "critic" the following notice in your story about the old pig: "This is the only error in your whole story. I admit that the old pig might have told you that, but he was wrong. Otherwise you correctly quoted him. Utah was admitted to statehood in 1896."

Not that it is worthy of much notice, but merely to expose the despicable, underhand methods of the crawling liar and sneaking hypocrite who wrote this note. I will state that I have received many unsolicited testimonials from people who were present at the time of the admission, and they all agree in fixing the date as June 20, 1896. I merely repeat this date for the purpose of showing to what depths creatures of the stamp of this anonymous writer will descend in an effort to impeach my dates.
